DETAILED ACTION

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 1-4, 6-19 are allowed.

The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

Claim 1, the prior art of record does not teach nor suggest, in the claimed combination, a rotary actuator with an IC attached to the core and electrically connected to the coil, wherein the distance between the IC and the coil is determined based on a permissible temperature of the IC [see paragraph 62 of the specification and figure 5b], so that the IC is not heated to substantially exceed the permissible temperature; wherein the IC is positioned adjacent to a part of the core that is adapted to contact a heat dissipation member; and wherein the heat dissipation member is a part of an object that is driven by the actuator.

Claim 13, the prior art of record does not teach nor suggest, in the claimed combination, a rotary actuator with an IC attached to the core and electrically connected to the coil, wherein the distance between the IC and the coil is determined based on a permissible temperature of the IC [see paragraph 62 of the specification and figure 5b], so that the IC is not heated to substantially exceed the permissible temperature; wherein the IC is positioned adjacent to a part of the core that is adapted to contact a heat dissipation member; spacer disposed between the core and an object driven by the actuator, so that the part of the core contacts the heat dissipation member via the spacer.

Claim 15, the prior art of record does not teach nor suggest, in the claimed combination, a rotary actuator with an IC attached to the core and electrically connected to the coil, wherein the distance between the IC and the coil is determined based on a permissible temperature of the IC [see paragraph 62 of the specification and figure 5b], so that the IC is not heated to substantially exceed the permissible temperature; wherein the IC is positioned such that a distance between a center of the IC and a part of the core that is adapted to contact a heat dissipation member is smaller than a distance between the center of the IC and a central axis of the coil; and wherein the heat dissipation member is a part of an object that is driven by the actuator.

Claim 18, the prior art of record does not teach nor suggest, in the claimed combination, a rotary actuator with an IC attached to the core and electrically connected to the coil, wherein the distance between the IC and the coil is determined based on a permissible temperature of the IC [see paragraph 62 of the specification and figure 5b], so that the IC is not heated to substantially exceed the permissible temperature; wherein the IC is positioned such that a distance between a center of the IC and a part of the core that is adapted to contact a heat dissipation member is smaller than a distance between the center of the IC and a central axis of the coil; a spacer disposed between the core and an object driven by the actuator, so that the part of the core contacts the heat dissipation member via the spacer.
